Just wanted to drop you a line about my experience at this year's Saratoga Rotary Art Show. This is my first year as a participating artist, and I found it to be stellar. Deborah Rice and her tireless crew made this major undertaking seem flawless, when I imagine behind the scenes this wasn't the case.

From the very beginning of being juried in, to the communications up to the show, to the day of the festival, the Rotarians showed care and respect to the artists. Participating in other festivals (I know) this isn't always the case. I've seen promoters using intimidation toward artists to sell, especially those whose livelihoods depend on these festivals and must put up with it.
